THAT SO-CALLED PROHIBITION LAW.

Editorial comment in Goodwin's Weekly regarding the coming election on prohibition in the state of Utah is as follows:

The election is drawing near and now it is time for voters to consider seriously how they are going to cast their votes. A great many sincere people, Mormons and Gentiles, reason that even if it is as said, that prohibition does not prohibit, still they feel it a duty to vote the prohibition ticket, their consciences impel them to. Now we beseech such people to study carefully the law, which it is intended to supplant the present law with and upon which the people are now preparing to vote.

If anyone tells the people that there is anything in that statute which prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicants, or which is intended to prohibit either the manufacture or sale of intoxicants; they either have not read the law, or, if they have, they cannot comprehend ordinary English, or they are unscrupulous knaves intending to deceive the honest voter.

The law is a jumble of 15,000 words. That is a most suspicious fact to begin with, and it seems to be a combine for what? A crushing out of the liquor traffic? Not at all, but a monopoly on its sale, and at the same time to cut the revenues of the city down one-fourth; to crowd many hundreds of worthy employees out of their positions, and at the same time to sell more and meaner booze than is sold at present. We do ask voters to take our word, but to read the law and study it until they feel themselves going crazy, and satisfy themselves whether what we have stated above is true or not.

President Smith says it is a crime in the eyes of God for a man to darken the door of a saloon to get a drink. Ask him how it will be in the hotels, or in the Co-op stores, of which he is president.

The News has often told of that halcyon time in the long ago when there were no saloons here. But in that time there were thirty-two or three distilleries running in Utah, and their product was all consumed here, and not one drop of it was wood alcohol, though it contained vastly more hell-fire than wood alcohol does?

Is it the plan to restore that old rule? It looks so. A man if he wants a drink goes and gets it. If he first has to get a prescription for an ingrown nail, he will not stop at a drink, he will buy a pint, a quart or a gallon, and take it home to get drunk in the bosom of his own family.

The whole law is framed with a direct purpose of deceiving the people as to its real intentions, and there is not only holy purpose, behind it. There is no intention of bringing prohibition to Utah in all its 15,000 words. It is a dishonest law. What might have been the thoughts in the minds of the men who patched it up in its crude and contradictory form, we know not, but someone was behind it who intended to fool the people with it, into voting to bring around here a state of affairs which will hurt the city more than a great fire, will cause citizens great losses; fill thousands with rage and cause the sale of vastly more intoxicants than are being sold now.

Judge Gary, head of the steel trust, calls on congress to amend the Sherman anti-trust law, but he wants it amended so that "ruinous competition" may be prevented. It would be interesting to know just what Judge Gary means by ruinous competition. Some philosophers and economists profess to believe that competition is the life of trade. Judge Gary seems to regard it as a destructive force which should be guarded against. Wonder what his opinion of monopoly is? Perhaps he regards that as altruistic and beautiful.

A Boston woman, said Bliss Carman at a dinner in New York, once asked Lowell to write in her autograph album, and the poet, complying, wrote the line, "What is so rare as a day in June?" Calling at this woman's house a few days later, Lowell idly turned the pages of the album till he came to his own autograph. Beneath it was written in a childish scrawl, "A Chinaman with whiskers."

The moving pictures, it appears, are cutting into the patronage of the theatres, and the theatres have decided on war. But if the public prefers the moving pictures, where's the remedy, unless the theatres give them, too?

A REBUKE TO CONGRESS.

A recent decision of the federal supreme court raps congress over the knuckles for meddling with the internal affairs of a state. This decision upheld the act of the Oklahoma legislature, making Oklahoma City the capital of that state. In the enabling act admitting Oklahoma into the Union, Congress provided that Guthrie should be the capital till 1913. This provision was very unsatisfactory to the people of Oklahoma, and the legislature ordered a special election to ascertain the popular will as to the location of the capital. By an overwhelming majority the people choose Oklahoma City. The legislature ratified the popular choice, but the citizens of Guthrie appealed to the courts to uphold the provision of the enabling act designating Guthrie as the capital until 1913.

The federal supreme court has decided that congress had no power to designate what place should be the capital after the admission of a state. In doing so it had usurped an unconstitutional function, in that it had violated the clause of the national constitution which says new states shall be admitted on an equality with the old.

When Oklahoma became a state congress ceased to have jurisdiction over its domestic affairs. The location of the capital is a domestic affair. If congress had the power to designate the location for a period, it has the power to designate the location perpetually. In saying that Guthrie should be the capital until 1913 congress attempted to do what it had no power to do and what it had no right to do. It was meddling with the domestic concerns of a sovereign state. So says the supreme court.

The decision will have a wholesome effect, in that it will have a tendency to check the efforts lately put forth in congress to impose upon territories asking admission into the Union organic laws which are not approved by their inhabitants who alone have the right to say what provisions shall be inserted in their state constitutions.

When he was president, Colonel Roosevelt began this sort of dictation by attempting to dragoon the people of Oklahoma into making their constitution fit his ideas. Congress is now trying to dictate in the same way to the people of Arizona. It is all wrong, and the people of Arizona are right in refusing to submit to it. We are opposed to the recall in all its phases, but the people of Arizona are within their rights in insisting that their constitution shall contain what they want in it. The recall of judges is pernicious, but the principle involved in the Arizona controversy is not the wisdom of the recall, but the right of the inhabitants of a sovereign state to make their own constitution. If congress has the right to demand that one provision be eliminated, it has an equal right to demand that others be kept out—in short, congress would have the power to make the constitution of every territory asking admission as a state. To this theory the supreme court has given denial in the Oklahoma decision.

MAJOR LITTLEFIELD.

Major E. A. Littlefield, who died in Ogden on Sunday morning last, aged 74 years, had been a newspaper man on the west coast for nearly or quite a half century. He was New England born, well educated and perfectly at home in a newspaper office, from the old-time roller boy to editor-in-chief. He was a man of strong convictions, he was of unapproachable integrity and enjoyed the confidence and respect of whole hosts of men both in private and public life.

He was a hard, patient worker and it is but a couple of years since he began to take any rest. He filled full the measure of a long life and has gone to his final rest without one reproach following him to vex his last sleep.

The call on Madero to suppress the troubles in Southern California, especially on the border where they keep American citizens anxious and in peril, is a reasonable one. And if he cannot do it, he should not object to the Californians wiping out the whole bandit gang, as they are anxious to do.

Politics in Mexico seems to consist of placing (by promise) all rivals in good positions after election, and Madero is an adept at it. He has a clear field, too, and there are places enough to go round, so that all aspirants can be suitably placed.

From present indications, we are likely to have an unsavory scandal out of the most recent Stokes case in New York. But there's this about Stokes scandals; they go the length when they begin.

The German army, it is said, discriminates against the Jew. If so, it is all the worse for the German army; for the world has never seen fiercer fighters than the Jews when their heart is in it.

The San Jose Chamber of Commerce is, like many another, a very much-alive organization. Its latest enterprise is to make a strenuous boost to increase its membership to the 2000 mark.

Mr. Carnegie predicts the disappearance of multimillionaires; but he shows no practical signs of dying poor as he declared it his intention to do.

Why should real prohibitionists help in a fight in which even if they win there is no possibility of their getting what they fought for?

The man who invented the lawn mower died the other day. The man who cusses it will always be with us.

Stories of long-lost mines are numerous in all mining regions. But the one just discovered in Arkansas is no myth, as most of such stories are.
